Abstract

The Northwest Region of BC is undergoing significant transitions. While there are commonalities in the challenges faced, there are also differences (e.g. impacts of globalization, cultural context) and in turn, varied opportunities for responding to challenges, planning for growth through adaptation and encouraging vibrant communities. Kitimat Industrial globalization, technological change and the continuing drive for local industry to stay competitive have combined to reduce the number of local industrial jobs and population. Kitimat's Economic Development Department forecasts up to $11 Billion of looming investment. While construction may make the economy boom, the downside is industrial job loss. Clarence Stein designed Kitimat to be a compact community: a transit- and pedestrian-friendly pattern of development which was very efficient to service and maintain. This 'sustainable' layout, plus a significant industrial tax base, allowed a high level of municipal services and low residential and commercial property taxes. The new environment is rural-size lots and the prospect of provincial limits on industrial taxation. This combination may require a paradigm shift for the current local government. This presentation will explore how you address this situation in the context of an Official Community Plan. Key topics will include: how the plan integrated the possibility of population decline with growth potential, explored the prospect of significant economic change and the emerging reality of a new community character, and promoted economic and environmental sustainability. Gitwinksihlkw The Nisga'a Village of Gitwinksihlkw is one of four Nisga'a Villages in BC's remote Nass Valley. Gitwinksihlkw is in the midst of transition under the terms of the landmark Nisga'a Treaty. Gitwinksihlkw has faced many challenges including population decline, housing, services and employment. Positive change is on the horizon. Moving forward, the Village is seeking to establish municipal-style structures to guide the natural growth of Gitwinksihlkw in a systematic and orderly way for the ultimate benefit of the community as a whole. The process of change moving forward is the development of the Official Community Plan and the Economic Development Strategic Plan. These plans are accompanied by a suite of Village legislation that supports community development and planning. This presentation will review the current work of the Village and the new context of operations as part of the Nisga'a Treaty. Terrace The City of Terrace and local First Nations are moving forward following a recent down-turn in the local resource based economy. Riding a wave of proposed regional industrial projects, such as the Rio-Tinto Alcan smelter modernization, Prince Rupert CN Container Port and mining developments among others, the City is looking to a wide spectrum of initiatives to prepare for growth and change. The Official Community Plan review, Downtown Planning, Integrated Community Sustainability Planning and Airport Lands Economic Development opportunities position the City to take advantage of the changing economy of Northwestern BC. This presentation will highlight long range planning initiatives, including the initial stages of developing a sustainable OCP and the award-winning Airport Lands Area Concept Plan. Community engagement in the development of a vision for 'Terrace 2050' will be the key initiative in drafting the Official Community Plan in 2009. The presentation will focus on positive partnerships that are being developed with the Kitselas and Kitsumkalum First Nations for economic and tourism development that will benefit and strengthen the local community.
